When I write a song, I always drift on my imaginary ocean while spinning a globe.
(Though sometimes I am nearly drawn in . . .)

The music that came out of my imaginary journeys is now venturing into the Eurasian continent.
When my work was performed in countries like Macedonia where people have experienced horrific circumstances, I kept thinking about "What is it that music is capable of doing?"

As long as I do not lose this sense of awe for people living on the land, my journeys in music continue.

Someone in the audience told me one day, "I love Missa's music for one reason only. I can listen to the music with my heart." These words stay with me as my thoughts reach out to Asia and Eurasia.

Someday in the near future, I wish that we can be a bridge between Asia and Europe in the way

Marco Polo traveled from the far western end to the eastern end. The artists and I hope that we can send you, even though it is only a small bridge, our hearts and musical notes in a souvenir called "Music" from Asia.
